

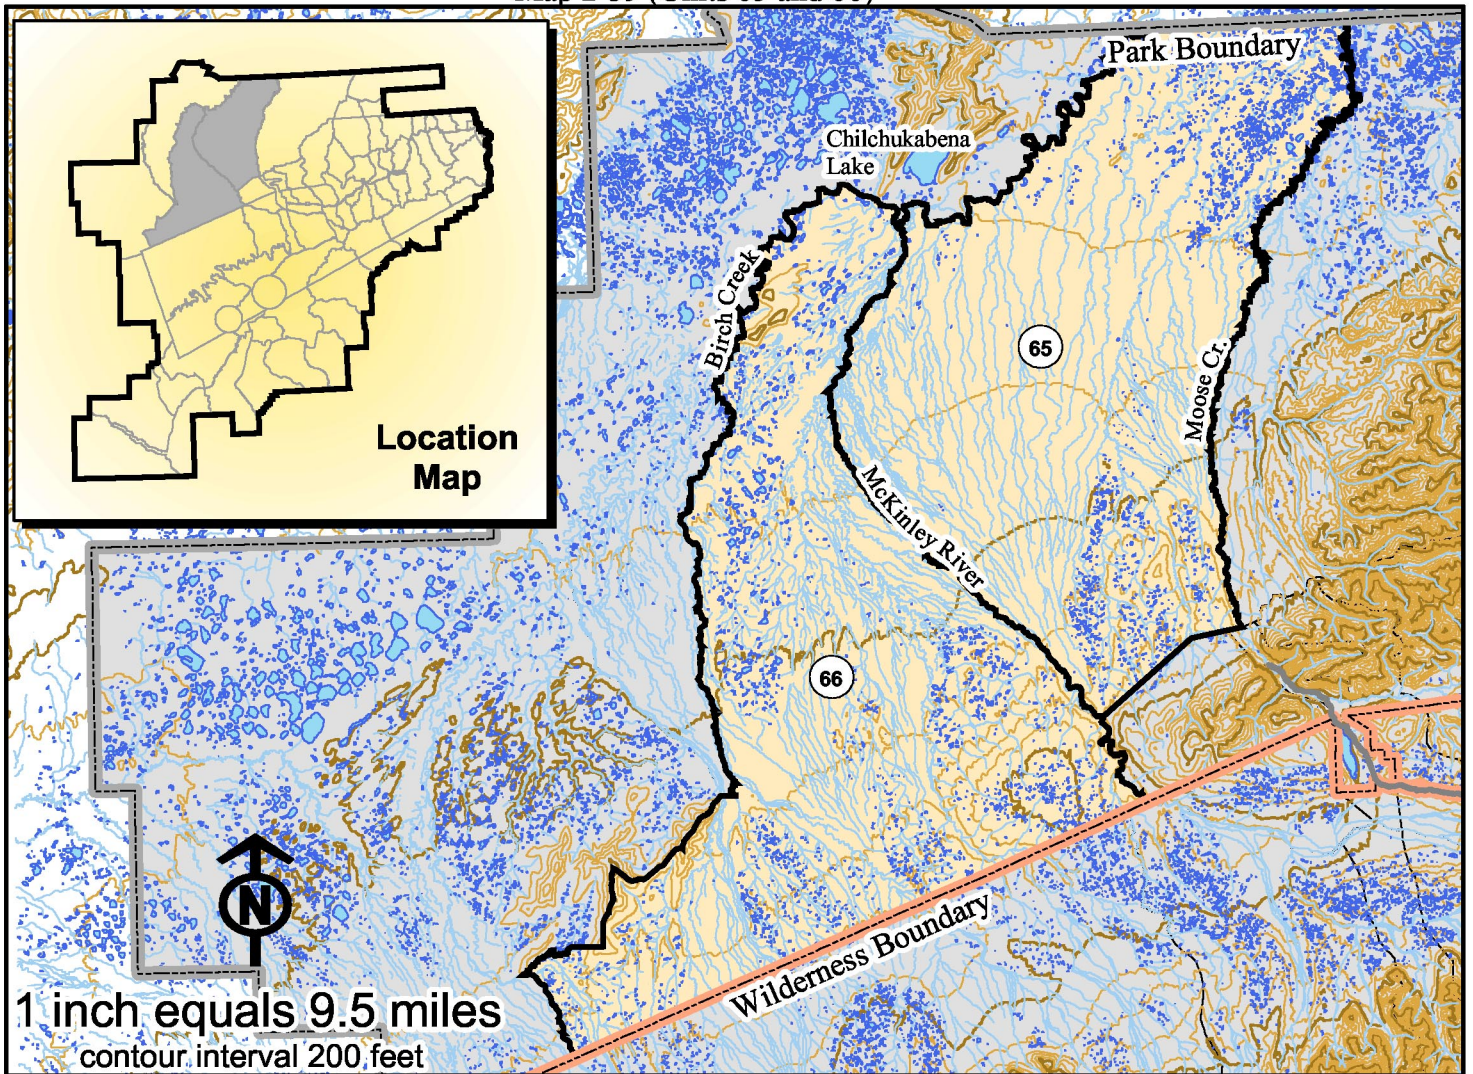

Map 2-39 (Units 65 and 66)

Moose-McKinley, McKinley-Birch (Unit 65, 66)

Predominately woodland spruce and stunted spruce. Forested hills, flat lowlands, and numerous lakes. Includes two large fire scars in the northern part of unit 65 and one in the middle of unit 66 (>300,000 acres). Wolf and bear dens. Old cabins for subsistence/trapping. Cabin, sauna, and cache at Roosevelt, which is in northern part of unit along McKinley River. Birch Creek village site and cemetery. Tributaries of Moose Creek in the northeastern part of unit 65 are anadromous. The western part of unit 66 is bound by Birch Creek, an anadromous stream. There are 26 cabins. Winter trails.

Uses: Receives little human use. Good opportunities for solitude and a variety of recreational activities. Occasional boating on the Kantishna River. Wilderness character is generally very good.